

Notes on Contributors

Patrick Barry is a clinical assistant professor of law at the University of Michigan Law School. He is the author of the forthcoming books Good with Words: Writing and Editing and The Syntax of Sports. Professor Barry has also written several academic articles on persuasion and frequently collaborates on cases with the Child Welfare Appellate Clinic and the Unemployment Insurance Clinic.

Jill Barton is a professor of legal writing and lecturer in law at the University of Miami School of Law. She is a former appellate judicial clerk and an award-winning journalist. She coauthored The Handbook for the New Legal Writer, a comprehensive legal-writing textbook for first-year law students. Her latest book is So Ordered: The Writer's Guide for Aspiring Judges, Judicial Clerks, and Interns.

Brad Charles is an associate professor of law at Western Michigan University Cooley Law School. He is the author of Applying Law and the interactive online textbook Research the Law, and served on the Panel of Practitioner Contributors for the ninth edition of Black's Law Dictionary. He is a former Executive Director of Scribes.

Matt Keating has practiced law in England and Australia, and currently practices at Valenti Lawyers in Western Australia. He has a bachelor of laws and a master of laws from the Universities of Western Australia and Sydney, respectively. At the latter he was mentored by renowned plain-language advocate Peter Butt and was awarded the legal-theory prize and the graduating prize.

Joseph Kimble is a distinguished professor emeritus at Western Michigan University Cooley Law School. He is senior editor of The Scribes Journal and editor of the “Plain Language” column in the Michigan Bar Journal, and he writes an editing column called “Redlines” for Judicature. He is the author of Lifting the Fog of Legalese; Writing for Dollars, Writing to Please; and Seeing Through Legalese.

Mary Massaron is a shareholder at Plunkett Cooney. She has handled or supervised over 400 appeals, including appeals in the Second, Third, Sixth, Seventh, and Ninth Circuits. She has chaired the ABA Standing Committee on Amicus Curiae Briefs and the ABA Council of Appellate Lawyers, and has published widely on appellate practice and legal writing.

Thomas Myers is a problem-solving courts analyst for the Michigan Supreme Court’s State Court Administrative Office. He is editor in chief of The Clarity Journal, the scholarly publication of Clarity International, and is an adjunct professor of scholarly writing at Western Michigan University Cooley Law School.

Jery Payne is a senior attorney in the Colorado General Assembly’s Office of Legislative Legal Services. He has drafted statutes for almost two decades, and his articles on the legislature, law, and drafting have appeared in various publications, including Legislative Lawyer. He’s been a speaker at national and international conferences on legislation and law reform.

Meg Penrose is a professor of law at Texas A&M University School of Law. She has worked for two federal judges and has published widely on constitutional law, especially on issues concerning the First Amendment, social media, same-sex marriage/divorce, criminal procedure, and, most recently, the Supreme Court Justices themselves.

Rachel H. Smith is a professor of legal writing at St. John’s University School of Law. She is the author of The Legal Writing Survival Guide and a coauthor of The Handbook for the New

---

Legal Writer. She received an Association of Legal Writing Directors teaching grant to produce her Perk Up Your Pens podcast series and has presented on legal writing at national conferences.

Beth Hirschfelder Wilensky is a clinical professor of law at the University of Michigan Law School. Her articles on legal writing have appeared in various publications, including Legal Communication & Rhetoric: JALWD. Before teaching, she was a litigator at Akin Gump Strauss Hauer & Feld LLP, in Washington, D.C. In law school, she was articles editor for the Harvard Journal on Legislation.